(c) The overall status of India as measured by the HDI is 0.602 out of a maximum value of 1. Of the three criteria comprising the HDI, India's position is 0.64 in the Life Expectancy Index, 0.61 in the Education Index and 0.56 in the GDP Index.

(d) The Government recognizes the importance of human development in development planning and in view of this the Tenth Plan has laid down specific monitorable targets for a few key indicators of human development along with the target for growth rate of GDP. These targets are considered as central to attainment of the objectives of Tenth Plan. The Government, both in the Centre and in the States have initiated a number of programmes to improve health and educational status of the people, as also to provide opportunities for employment and enhanced incomes. In order to improve literacy and universal enrolment, investment in education has been increased substantially both for the Sarva Siksha Abhiyan and for universal coverage under the mid-day meal scheme. Similarly, in the health sector, there has been step up in investment with a new thrust on rural health (The National Rural Health Mission). In order to improve the level of living of the people, rapid economic growth with social justice is envisaged in the planning process. The Tenth Five Year Plan (2002—07) target a GDP growth rate of 8% per year. The emphasis is on agriculture development and on labour-intensive sectors, which would generate greater employment in the growth process. In addition, there are specially targeted anti-poverty programmes for the poor and disadvantaged groups. Improving delivery and governance are also receiving attention of the Government. These initiatives are expected to improve the various indicators used in the UN Human Development Index to provide the basic aspects of human development in the country.
